Which of You Gen’l’men is Masser Holmes?

The March 20, 2016 Regular Monthly Meeting of The Sound of the Baskervilles will begin at 1:30 p.m. at The Seattle Public Library (Queen Anne Branch) at 400 West Garfield, Seattle (driving directions at left).

Says PLF David: This our 55th of the 60 Holmes stories. It was published in 1926 but few seem to be able to accurately date its occurrence: It varies—according to Jack Tracy—from 1896 to 1902 or 1903. And, wow, this one is a corker! As Watson says in his opening, “I don’t think that any of my adventures with Mr. Sherlock Holmes opened quite so abruptly, or so dramatically, as that which I associate with The Three Gables.”

And, what a cast! There’s the bully Steve Dixie, who warns Holmes’ to keep his hands out of other folks’ business; young Perkins who was killed outside the Hol-born Bar; Barney Stockdale, of the Spencer John gang, and his wife Susan; widow Mary Maberley and the strange goings-on at her home; her recently-deceased son Douglas; and the lady behind all the mischief, Isadora Klein! It’s mayhem and mystery all round!

We hope we’ve whetted your appetite for adventure!! Study up on “The Adventure of the Three Gables” and see you in March!!

- Our Sherlockian friends in Vancouver, BC, the Stormy Petrels, have a storyteller night on March 3rd! If you’re in their neck of the woods, you should go! - Here’s the rundown on some of the greater UK shooting locations for BBC’s Sherlock—but they’ve missed one, I know because I’ve been there! Portland Square, in Bristol, is where they filmed the terrifying scene with John nearly being buried alive. Has anyone been to any of these places? http://www.anglotopia.net/british-entertainment/brit-tv/sherlock-guide-sherlock-filming-locations-across-uk/

Like the heroes who came in his wake, Sherlock is a master of deduction, social engineering, and getting out of traps by using whatever random items happen to be at hand. He’s also a smartass.”
- I haven’t necessarily thought about it this way, but one can’t deny that knowing what you’re doing is sexy. Being an insufferable know-it-all detracts a bit, though, in my opinion.
- This looks very cool: “Potted Sherlock”!

And, response posted by SOB Cameron Brandon on February 4: “I saw it last year in London (on the Strand!) and it’s definitely well done. I can’t believe how people can memorize so many lines. They should tour and bring it closer to the Northwest.”

- Sherlock Seattle is coming!! October 21-23! Look for details about how to get involved! Ever wanted to be on staff or volunteer? Now is your chance! www.sherlock-seattle.org. You could be as cheery as these ladies:

Miscellaneous: There’s a new Sherlockian-inspired YA series out featuring “Jamie & Charlotte” (www.goodreads.com/book/show/23272028-a-study-in-charlotte) ● “Elementary” will soon introduce us to Sherlock’s Mom! ● The 2016 Sherlock-Con in London is September 23 to 25 but “meet & greets” will run £2000!

- Holmes Brothers on Politics
The following—on Page 216 of a book in our Club Library, “The Biography and Autobiography of Sherlock Holmes” by Mycroft Holmes and Sherlock Holmes (edited by Don Libey)—is so appropriate for us now as our politics heat up:

“It is not an efficient method of either solving problems or providing services. Politics principally involves power, favour, money and influence and those all lead inevitably to corruption of purpose and not to efficiency of solutions… Neither a monarchy nor a parliamentarian form of government can result in truth or an accurate assessment of the necessary actions that will result in the proper benefits for all people.”

Thanks to SOB Lauran Stevens

The Mysterious World of Sherlock Holmes

The “Friends of the Sherlock Holmes Collections” December 2015 newsletter (Vol. 16, No. 4) featured an essay by PhD candidate, Dave McLaughlin, in which he wrote of his discovery of The Sherlock Holmes Collections.

To further whet your appetite to trek to Minneapolis this June to both attend and support our PFL David’s presentation there and to visit this marvelous collection, we excerpt Mr. McLaughlin’s essay here:

To be a PhD student, I am often told, is to become an expert in my (very small) area of research... I’m not really an expert in anything; I’ve just gotten quite good at arguing for one particular thing. Nothing puts this idea into better perspective than a visit to the Sherlock Holmes Collections at the University of Minnesota. • I knew hardly anything about Holmes before I started. In fact it was an old girlfriend who got me interested in the stories, through the (Robert Downey Jr.) movies and BBC Sherlock—I had not really read any Holmes before...It was reading the Canon in the light of these two interpretations, rather than my interest in any particular theory, that got me interested in Sherlockian travel writing as a topic. My original research question was looking at “London” and “Not London” in the Canon—I had no idea about the extent of Sherlockian writing and travel tourism until I got to the archives. In fact, contact with these sources made my thesis so much easier than it would have been, rather than wedge a postmodern theory of mobility onto Doyle’s texts, I’m uncovering a tendency to movement coupled with world-building among the readers. • It was in the Library of Congress that my thinking on my PhD topic started to change. I had come in thinking of my thesis as a study into real, physical movement of people, objects and the narrator’s point of view—in Doyle’s Sherlock Holmes stories. But the more I came into contact with readers’ and fans’ writings about “the world of Sherlock Holmes”-starting with David Hammer’s Game series of travel books—the more I came to realize that the real object of my curiosity was not “how did Doyle create the fictional world of Holmes?” but rather, “how have fans made Holmes’ world the way it is and why have they been so keen to get up and walk (or drive or take a train) through it.”(Then) I noticed something in the books I was reading at the Library of Congress. Before c.1970, fans...were more likely to imagine the world of Sherlock Holmes as “a romantic chamber of the heart; a nostalgic country of the mind”; they would argue about Victorian London architecture with information drawn from books or they would, like Julian Wolff, make maps of “the world strictly according to Doyle”...Yet, after c.1970, all that changed. Readers like Hammer were much more likely to leave their homes, to wander the streets of London, of Europe, of New York City and return with new truths about the world of Sherlock Holmes. Guidebooks to Sherlockian locations became popular...For example,) Arthur Axelrad’s On the Scent, which takes readers on a long, circular walk through London’s streets, starting and ending around Baker Street, and which includes instructions on where to stand to take the best photographs. • While the Library of Congress collections whet my whistle on this subject, it was the Sherlock Holmes Collections that gave me the means to really explore it... (Having only one week at the Collections) luckily for me I had help, in the persons of Tim Johnson and his colleagues, who put in every effort behind the scenes to make sure that I and my fellow reading room users could see as much as possible, as quickly as possible...It took my thinking into new and productive directions as well. From one fan’s imaginative interpretation of Sherlock’s observation in BRUC that, “Mycroft has his rails and he runs on them,” putting the elder Holmes at the centre of a murder mystery on The Flying Scotsman; to another’s colorful, illustrative guide to the international flavor of Sherlockian fandom; and one booklet about the writings simply titled, Who’s Where?—it was hard not to find evidence for my hypothesis that geographical imaginings are an important part of how Sherlockians understand the world of Sherlock Holmes. • I can happily say that (my visit to the Collections) opened my eyes to material that vastly improved the quality and reach of my research...My visit did something else, too. It gave me a realization that for many Sherlockians, playing the game is more than just writing about a favorite character or a fictional world—it can be about getting involved in a community of fans, about visiting Europe or about playing a part in something much, much bigger than oneself. So far my adventures with Holmes have taken me from London and Cambridge, to Washington and New York and, finally, Minneapolis. In my mind and on my pages I have ventured further still, to Holmes Peak in Oklahoma and even to Sherlock Crater on the moon. Where, I wonder, will these writings on the writings take me next?
An Update on Doyle’s Former Home, Undershaw

Here from Al & Margaret Nelson’s good friend in the UK is an update on Undershaw

By: Joe McDonald, Haslemere, Surrey, England

Undershaw was built by Arthur Conan Doyle under a “shaw”, which is apparently an old English word for a copse. The building was used for many years as a restaurant during a very large part of the 20th century but then fell into disuse from the 1990s for lack of a buyer. At the turn of the millennium, it was bought by a property company in the British Virgin Islands (BVI), which hoped to turn a big profit by selling it on to someone who might develop it into well-to-do living quarters. The local borough council, called Waverley, gave outline permission for this sort of usage but were challenged in the High Court of Justice by a rich and eccentric man called John Gibson, who argued that it should only be used for some “proper” purpose of the sort which Doyle might have approved. The High Court supported Gibson, who then tried for five or six years to recruit financial support worldwide with a view to turning Undershaw into some sort of literary heritage centre. Despite many expressions of goodwill, no adequate support was forthcoming.

Gibson failed to recruit any serious amount of money—merely airy promises. Then David Forbes-Nixon, a local man with a child who had learning difficulties, teamed up with another rich man with a child similarly disadvantaged. They bought the property from the BVI investors and began to develop it as a school for many local children with difficulties similar to those suffered by Forbes-Nixon’s daughter and proposed to develop the building and property in a sympathetic way. He argued that, because Doyle had devised it as a property for his sick wife in a district where the air was pure and where her TB might be mitigated, the use he proposed for the premises would be in keeping with Doyle’s motives and intentions. Local people said “Hooray!” and he went on with the development.

Then however, Gibson stepped in again, claimed the usage would be “inappropriate” and took the question and his own complaint back to the High Court, in order to stop Forbes-Nixon in his tracks. Forbes-Nixon carried on building and we held our breath waiting for the High Court to pronounce. Then, with masterly British timing and very much in the spirit of the Christmas season, on Christmas Eve 2015, the High Court Judge pronounced that Gibson’s case was unsupportable in law and that Forbes-Nixon should go ahead.

The school should be ready for September 2016 and interested visitors will be welcomed on site, so you SOBs need to come and visit!

Editor’s Notes:

- Undershaw was built for Doyle at his order and is where his family lived from 1897 to 1907. It is also where Doyle wrote many of his works, including HOUN.
- As to whether Doyle would approve of Undershaw’s use as a school, Richard Doyle, great nephew of Sir Arthur wrote, “I don’t believe that Undershaw should be preserved in aspic, but lived in and laughed in...If it’s possible for some of this magical, special building to become the heart of a new school that contributes to the thriving community of Hindhead then I would be very happy”.
- Undershaw is located in the village of Hindhead in Surrey, near the town of Haslemere and is about 40 miles southwest of London.
- The location was chosen to cater to the medical needs of Doyle’s wife Louise, who suffered from tuberculosis. Writing to his mother Mary in May 1895, Doyle lauded the building site because “…its height, its dryness, its sandy soil, its fir trees, and its shelter from all bitter winds present the conditions which all agree to be best in the treatment of phthisis (TB)...I have bought 4 acres under £1000 and I don’t think it will prove to be a bad investment.”

- PFL David forgot his briefcase—first time ever—so he had to turn the tables and have Members ask the (very great) questions!! So, we had a 3-way tie this time on our study of ILLU between Airy, Cameron and Sheila ◐ Margie Deck won’t be able to be on The SOB Team for the next John H. Watson Society’s Annual Treasure Hunt (because she’s the one creating it!!), so Lauren Messenger and Melinda Michaelson have volunteered to represent our Club in this world-wide competition! Naturally, they’ll need help from SOBs near and far, so please help them if you can!! (We’ll provide their contact info as this event gets closer: i.e., this summer!!) ◐ We discussed where and how to obtain A/V equipment for future speakers needing to show slides, as we may have one or more this year, including Jerry Margolin, BSI from Portland!!! ◐ And, Lauran S announced the 1st and 2nd place and "honourable mention" winners in the just-ended “The Best Cast for the Ultimate Sherlock Holmes” film contest! Taking 1st place was DC Smith—with his dream cast consisting of Lee Van Cleef as Holmes, Claude Raines as Watson, Boris Karloff as Moriarty, Terry Thomas as Lestrade, Margaret Rutherford as Mrs. Hudson, and Sidney Greenstreet as Mycroft. - SOB Sonia Fetherston, BSI dropped a line to let us know she’s won the “Derrick Murdoch Memorial Award” from The Bootmakers of Toronto—for having the “best article in Canadian Holmes” (their periodical) during 2015! Her article, “A Study in V” told how Doyle used the letter “V” to enhance his Sherlockian writings. For details, go to: www.torontobootmakers.com

- SOB Ginie Romnes’ surgery is scheduled for early March. Please drop her a card when you can to: Ginie Romnes, 18226 SE 164th Street, Renton, WA 98058
